

§ 4.5

Social Media

Infinite Information

TWITTER

There are so many Twitter accounts that deal with the law that it can be intimidating and confusing. It can also be a gold mine of information. To be efficient and effective, consider the following:

Rule 1. Don't follow too many accounts

Try to limit yourself to no more than 8 or 10 accounts. You can always adjust which ones you are following based on how much you tune in to each account, but once you follow too many, you will likely become overloaded.

Rule 2. There are 3 types of legal blogs

There are many types of blogs about the law, but most fall into one of these categories:

Informational/Neutral

These are the best blogs. They at least attempt to provide information that informs, even if it is sometimes "leaning" left or right. Even if they espouse a more conservative or liberal point of view as to the law, they at least try to be fair.

Marketing

Marketing blogs are often disguised as providing a service, and some do, but the primary function is to promote a product or service.

Partisan

The least useful of blogs. They only espouse views through the lens of their own philosophy, with little room for legitimate discourse. If you do subscribe to a partisan blog (liberal, conservative, libertarian, etc.) make it a practice to subscribe to an alternate point of view for each partisan account you follow. It may help you from falling too deep into the rabbit hole.

RECOMMENDED BLOGS

WSJ Law Blog (@WSJLawBlog) Guardian Law (@GdnLaw) Bitter Lawyer (@BitterLawyer) ABA Journal (@ABAJournal) Overlawyered (@overlawyered) Legal Planet (@LegalPlanet)

CHAPTER 4

Wrap-Up

WHAT YOU SHOULD KNOW

After reading this chapter you should know the following:

Terminology related to civil law
Terminology related to criminal law
The general process related to civil law
The general process related to criminal law
How to approach the practice of following Twitter accounts related to the law

ASSIGNMENTS

There are no assignments for this chapter.